Unlike many of these sites, England's Lake District seems an unlikely place for a haunting. The park contains bright valleys and wild ponies. It inspired William Wordsworth to write his most famous poem—about the park's daffodils. But even this quaint corner of England hides at least one unspeakable horror.

Described as 'violent', 'forceful' and 'haunting', Hawksmoor's buildings are uncompromising confrontations. The work of an accomplished scholar, his achievements at Castle Howard, Easton Neston, Greenwich Hospital and Oxford betray a deep understanding of space and the principles of engineering. In 1715, Nicholas Hawksmoor ...

The Haunted Moors is a Halloween themed event zone in Villagers & Heroes. Ghoulish creatures cavort and prowl in this eerie wasteland of wondrous horrors, where that foulest of witches, Druda, awaits all those who dare tread into her terrifying lair. Be prepared for a truly macabre, yet rewarding, experience. For those who live, that is.

The axehead is alien, electric, timeless. You might say it's haunted, or, better yet, that it is itself a kind of haunting, like the old bone whistle ("Quis est iste qui venit") that Professor Parkins finds on a desolate shore, or the lost Anglian crown that dooms its discoverer. Landscape here serves as a medium - like the shaded ...

The Haunted Moor is the domain of the Black Dog. It is almost completely silent, save for the howling of Prowlers. Prowlers in the Haunted Moor are more visibly canine than most, resembling werewolves more than altered humans. They have lengthened snouts, matted black fur all over their body, red eyes, and tails.

The Haunting opened to mixed reception, the consensus generally being that it was a stylish film but had major flaws in the plot and lacked excitement. Variety called the acting effective, Davis Boulton's cinematography extraordinarily dexterous and visually exciting, and Elliott Scott's production design of the "monstrous" house most decidedly the star of the film.
