The Tithe War (Irish: Cogadh na nDeachúna) was a campaign of mainly nonviolent civil disobedience, punctuated by sporadic violent episodes, in Ireland between 1830 and 1836 in reaction to the enforcement of tithes on the Roman Catholic majority for the upkeep of the established state church, the Church of Ireland. Tithes were payable in cash or kind and payment was compulsory, irrespective of an individual's religious adherence.

Perhaps the best known incident in the 'Kentish Tithe War' was 'the battle of the ducks', their 'liberation' and return to their 'rightful' pond at Beechbrook Farm in Westwell. [11] The campaign began when between 70 and a 100 people, mostly young men and some with trucks met at the Half-Way House on the Dover Road.

Resistance to paying tithes was common in East Anglia, Sussex and Kent where there had been a long tradition of Nonconformity that in their geographical links to Lollardy predated the Reformation. In Kent for instance, about 3,000 people met at Barham Downs in May 1834 [5] to denounce the evils inflicted by tithes while the Sevenoaks Chronicle reported in 1883 that support for tithe ...

Two of them are about St Walstan (the East Anglian Patron Saint of Agriculture and Farm Workers) and the other is Tithe War 1918-1939: The Countryside in Revolt. I did offer Tithe War to a local publisher but having shown initial interest in the end decided it was too big a project for him to take on.

Rebecca Writes: Writer - Carol Twinch

This thesis attempts to provide a general history of the tithe system during the last century and a half of its existence in its old form. It attempts this partly through a detailed study of one county, thus enabling a wider variety of legal, administrative, ecclesiastical and parochial documents to be used than has been attempted in previous studies of the tithe system.
